Title: Time Saving Tips for Teaching Online

Abstract: This is a practical webinar for faculty who are keen to find more efficient ways to be effective teachers. Participants will reflect on their work habits and identify a handful of tasks that are among the most time consuming in teaching. They will review instructional design and e-pedagogy principles that successfully reduce instructor workloads and will examine grading techniques and communication technologies that deliver robust, consistent, and individualized feedback with rapidity and precision. While this webinar is platform-neutral, it assumes a certain facility with learning-management and email systems as well as word-processing and spreadsheet applications.

Presenter: Dr. Susan Hines

Wednesday September 2nd at 4pm est.

Title: Faculty Embracing A New Role with Student Persistence and Retention

Abstract: Our campuses remain in a dynamic and uncertain state of operations, as health and economic challenges continue. More students are at risk, and retention efforts to help students persist and succeed are more critical than ever. Whether you are teaching online courses, in-person courses, or hybrid courses, you have the best opportunity – more than anyone else at your institution – to have meaningful engagements with your students. This session will focus on promising practices for:

- Helping online students feel connected with you, other students in the course, and the school
- Spotting early symptoms of a student becoming more at risk
- Responding to students with care and concern
- Connecting students with key campus resources when needed

Presenter: Dr. Tim Coley

Wednesday September 9th at 4pm est.

Title: Engaging students to get their best

Abstract: Are you getting the quality of participation that you would like to see from your students? Are they meeting your expectations, or do you believe they are falling short of their capabilities? How can you inspire them to fulfill their potential? This workshop will help you choose which engagement strategies to embed in your class, so students not only meet but exceed your expectations while increasing retention overall satisfaction.
